Abstract Shortlisted for the Phi Beta Kappa Society’s Christian Gauss Award. The poet Langston Hughes was a tireless traveler; his own writings traveled even more widely than he did, earning him adulation throughout Europe, Asia, and Africa. As a part of the African diaspora, translation is more than just a literary practice: it is a fact of life and a way of thinking. This book offers new evaluations of Hughes's seminal texts. We observe him at work translating, but we also see his works being translated. The literatures of the African diaspora as well as anyone, brings a keen understanding of both race and ethnicity. This work, which will be widely influential."—John Lowe, Louisiana State University
