they say on a day like this day some kids were playing with a ougi board they were idiots and summoned clara the little girl murderer she says, "clara, clara, clara". then she slits your throat and sucks your soul out and gives you eternal pain worse than the ninthe circle of hellokittyland and goes crazy killing people. well i cant say more of the story but here is a list of haunted locations:

The Alkimos is a shipwreck of a former U.S. Navy ship from World War II that occurred off the coast of Western Australia in 1964.[1]

Ararat Lunatic Asylum or "Aradale" is the largest abandoned Lunatic Asylum in Australia. Opened in 1867, Aradale was reserved for many of the incurable Lunatics in Victoria during the 1800s. An estimated 13,000 people died here in 140 years of operation.

Beechworth Lunatic Asylum in Beechworth, Victoria is reportedly haunted by several ghosts of departed patients. The asylum was open from 1867 to 1995. It has appeared in several books, television shows, and documentaries, including A.C.T. Paranormal. Ghost tours run nightly.[2]

Monte Cristo Homestead in Junee, New South Wales was the site of seven deaths in the 1800s and is reported[by whom?] to be the most haunted house in Australia. Various ghost groups have reported sightings there.[3]

Thirteen people were executed at the Ballarat Gaol in Ballarat. The remains of seven criminals are still in the grounds. The Ballarat Ghost Tours operate nightly.[4]

Port Arthur in Tasmania operate nightly ghost tours. However, no mention is made of the Port Arthur massacre there and they like to keep that respected by the public.[5]

Princess Theatre in Melbourne has reported several ghosts since the building opened in 1886. The theatre's best known 'inhabitant' is Frederick Baker, stage name 'Federici', a talented bass-baritone singer who died in March 1888 whilst singing Mephistopheles in Faust – and who was seen by the rest of the cast taking his bows with them shortly thereafter. For years the theatre kept a seat vacant in the dress circle for Federici (only ceasing the practice on economic grounds), and his appearance in the dress circle during rehearsals for a new show is considered a good omen.[6]

Lalor House in Richmond, Victoria is reportedly haunted by the ghosts of the family of Peter Lalor.[7]

“Gawler house” in Gawler, South Australia is reportedly haunted by past tenants. One visitor has reported feeling a choking sensation when he entered the house. The house is almost destroyed, missing its roof.

Brisbane City Hall in Brisbane, Australia has several stories of deaths spanning the eras before and after construction of the impressive structure. During the building's construction workmen were said to have died while placing the foundations, which were on top of a former swamp. It is also said that the area was once a significant Aboriginal site – either a meeting place or camp ground. One story relates to the death of a maintenance man or lift attendant who either fell to his death down the lift well or was crushed by the lift in his daily duties – this story likely results from an unfortunate suicide from the clock tower that occurred in 1935 (Haunts Of Brisbane). Another story claims an American soldier was stabbed to death during the war after a fight over an Australian girl turned ugly. Staff are said to have reported the sounds of an argument from the Red Cross Tea Room, and there are many reports of sounds and unusual activity throughout the hall relating to the areas surrounding these deaths. A third story claims the apparition of a woman is regularly seen traversing the main stairs in the lobby & looking out over the foyer – a story which likely results from yet another suicide from City Hall's Clock Tower in 1937, although recent photos of the stairwell exhibit a possible apparition.(Haunts Of Brisbane)

Whepstead House in Wellington Point, Queensland is rumoured to have a number of ghosts – Gilbert Burnett's wife Martha who spreads the scent of lavender perfume; the daughter of Gilbert & Martha, who apparently disappeared without trace; Gilbert & Martha's son who had a withered leg & haunts the stairwell; & the ghost of an elderly servant who is seen around the house in a bowler's hat & suit. Whilst not one of these stories has any historic basis, the house itself acted as a private hospital for a number of decades, during which time well over a dozen people passed away – it's likely that its haunted atmosphere & unusual events result from this period of use. (Haunts Of Brisbane)

Victoria Park Railway Tunnel in Brisbane, Australia played host to one of Brisbane's most famous ghosts in 1965, after a group of local children overheard rumours suggesting a ghost had been observed within the tunnel. The following night, the intrepid ghost hunters crept down in the hope of spotting the spook. One boy, lagging behind the rest of the group as they passed through the tunnel, was apparently accosted by a misty green, armless, legless, headless apparition that seemed to materialise from the wall of the tunnel. Seemingly “mesmerised” by the spectre, the boy was dragged by his friends to the nearby Royal Brisbane Hospital – his companions feared he had been possessed by the ghost. The ensuing tale, as related by the children to hospital staff, made sensational newspaper headlines the next day and within a short time, thousands of local residents were lining both sides of the tunnel in the hopes of catching a glimpse of the ghost. For the next week, the Victoria Park ghost became the major talking point of Brisbane, & numerous suggestions to its identity were put forward, although the spectre may very well have resulted from one of the numerous suicides that took place in Victoria Park in previous years. (Haunts of Brisbane)

St. John's Orphanage in Goulburn, New South Wales is suspected to have some ghosts in the building.

Barbados

Chase Vault is a burial vault in the cemetery of the Christ Church Parish Church in Oistins, Christ Church, Barbados best known for a widespread but unverified legend of "mysterious moving coffins". According to the story, each time the heavily sealed vault was opened in the early 19th century for burial of a family member, all of the lead coffins had changed position. The facts of the story are unverified, and skeptics call the tale "historically dubious." The tale appears to have originated from anecdotes told by Thomas H. Orderson, Rector of Christ Church during the 1800s, and subsequently repeated in James Edward Alexander's 1833 Transatlantic Sketches.^[8]^[9]^[10]^[11]^[12]^[13]^[14]

Brazil

The Joelma Building in São Paulo is allegedly haunted by victims of the fire that started on February 1, 1974, after an air conditioning unit on the twelfth floor overheated. The building is famous for the "Mystery of the Thirteen Souls", individuals who died within an elevator when they were trying to escape the fire, and are allegedly haunting the building today.^[15]

Forbidden City: Located in the heart of Beijing and home to the Palace Museum, for 600 years the Forbidden City was the Chinese imperial palace from the Ming Dynasty to the end of the Qing Dynasty. It was the home of the country's all-powerful imperial family – along with a nest of concubines and servants willing to betray and murder one another for influence. Thousands have lived and died within its blood red walls. As a result, many visitors and workers have claimed to have seen ghosts there, such as a group of maids-in-waiting or eunuchs walking by.[17]

Great Wall of China: The Great Wall has many reports from strange apparitions as well as the sounds of marching footsteps from the reports of local tourists and employees. Many local villagers will prevent from going up to the Wall alone, believing something very unfortunate will happen if they do. The TV series Destination Truth sent an expedition to spend the night investigating these supernatural reports near “The Wild Wall.” [21]

Shanghai: The Normandie Apartment was named after the World War I warship Normandie and designed by the famous Hungarian architect Ladislav Hudec, the building has a French Renaissance style similar to a large ship. Built in 1924, the building was the first apartment house in Shanghai with an outside gallery. Over the years, the apartments were home to many film stars. Sounds of footsteps running up the stairs, loud voices from empty rooms and even breaking glass is rumored to be heard from this apartment building. The seventh floor corner apartment especially is believed to be haunted by a former tenant. This actress committed suicide by jumping out the window.[17][22]

The Qiu Mansion was built by two brothers who were peasants turned millionaires during the beginning of the 20th century. They lived a lavish lifestyle with a garden around the mansion complete with peacocks, tigers and crocodiles. During the prime of their life they both simply disappeared. Since then workers who have come in contact with the closed mansion complain of bizarre animal bites and sightings.[17]

Tuen Mun Road: Over the years many claim that this highway is haunted and the direct cause for the many car accident deaths that occur. The accidents are said to be a result of the drivers trying to avoid hitting the ghosts that suddenly materialize in the middle of the road. Some drivers have reported to officers they have lost complete control of their vehicles as if someone else were driving.[17][23]

Denmark

Dragsholm Castle in Zealand is said to be haunted by the ghost of James Hepburn, 4th Earl of Bothwell, who was imprisoned there for about five years until his death in 1578.[24]

Egypt

Baron Empain Palace: Tourists have reportedly heard voices throughout the palace during late at night. Guards and police have reportedly seen ghostly apparitions of who were once residents of the palace, wandering the outside lawn at midnight.[20]

Farafra Desert: The ghost of Akhenaten is said to wander the Farafra Desert (also known as the White Desert) of Egypt and has been reported to have been seen by dozens of tourists and nomads. Legend has it is because Akhenaten abolished the Egyptian gods when he became pharaoh, he angered the religious followers and priests. When Akhenaten died, the priests cursed him to wander the deserts forever as punishment for banishing their polytheistic beliefs.[25]

Pyramids of Giza: A man in early 20th century clothing has been seen by visitors, rumors have reported him to be the ghost of Howard Carter. Various employees and tourists have reported seeing an orb figure, appeared to be the shape of a pharaoh, float away from the pyramids, and headed south toward the Valley of the Kings. [20]

Valley of the Kings: Eyewitnesses have reported seeing the vision of an Egyptian pharaoh riding a chariot blazing through the Valley of the Kings, wearing his golden collar, headdress, and riding a chariot with black phantom horses at the front.[20]

France

Château de Brissac: The story says that Jacques de Breze caught his wife, Charlotte, with another person. In a fit of rage, de Breze murdered them both. Tourists have reported a sense of an eerie feeling and slight touches. Reports of ghostly sightings abound and wailing throughout the halls.[26]

Château de Trécesson: There are various legends attached to the castle. The most known is that of the White lady, but there are also those of the Headless curate, the phantom card players and the Manoir du Pied d'Anon .[27]

Château de Versailles: Once home to the French royal family between 1682 and 1789, a few tourists and employees have reported seeing people in 18th century clothing. There have been reports of numerous sightings of the beheaded Queen, Marie Antoinette. Claims of orbs and ghostly presences seen in tourists' photos have been made and descriptions of being touched by ghosts are often recounted. Some have reported supernatural experiences throughout the gardens, different landscape than what people would see today.[26]

Mont Saint-Michel: Ghostly sightings of monks wandering the area have been reported.[26]

Paris: The Catacombs of Paris are said to be haunted by strange orbs, and standing human figures from different centuries. Reports of voices being heard throughout the walls, the feeling of a presence or a touch by someone not there also have been made.[26]

Père Lachaise Cemetery: The largest cemetery in Paris, France; it is the most visited cemetery in the world and is said to be one of the most haunted cemeteries in Europe. Some people have experienced overwhelming shivers and sense of unease, although some have experienced calmness. Claims have been made of photos from visitors and investigators revealing orbs and ghostly apparitions, and EVPs being recorded throughout the cemetery.[26]

Germany

Berlin: The Reichstag building has been reported to be haunted by numerous ghosts of famous German political figures.[20]

Heidelberg: The Hexenturm Witches Tower and the Nazi Amphitheatre are both said to be haunted by various ghosts.[20]

Lichtenegg Castle: The ghost of a lady in a white dress of death is supposed to be standing in front of the ruins of the entrance at midnight, stepping down into the ditch. She will, usually, sit down on a flat rock covered with moss.[20]

Rosenheim: The well known Rosenheim Poltergeist, has one of the best known supernatural activities in Germany. In 1967, strange phenomena began to occur in the office of lawyer Sigmund Adam. Telephones would ring with no one at the other end, photocopiers spilt their ink, and desk drawers would open without being touched. A German paper installed equipment to monitor the phones and in 3 months they recorded over 600 calls to the speaking clock – despite the fact that all of the telephones were unplugged. In one 15-minute period, 46 calls were recorded – a rate that seemed impossible given the mechanical dialing system in place. In October 1967, all light bulbs in the building went out with a huge bang. After installing cameras and voice recorders, investigators were able to discover that the events only took place when 19-year-old Annemarie Schneider (a recently employed secretary) was present. It was claimed that a suspended light would swing violently when Ms Schneider walked beneath it, and the lights would flicker whenever she walked in to the office. When Schneider went on holiday the events stopped. Upon her return, the poltergeist activity returned. Schneider was fired and the problems stopped.[28]

Schloss Nordkirchen: The Nordkirchen Castle was built between 1703 and 1734. There used to be a large water tower in its place in the 1600s. It is surrounded by two water ditches, thus, the castle sits on a square island. Four pavilions are located in each corner. The architecture is a baroque style constructed by Johann Conrad Schlaun. According to the legend, at full moon and certain foggy nights, few people have reports of seeing a luxurious carriage with stallions running through the night.[20]

Wolfsegg, Bavaria, Wolfsegg Castle: The 14th century castle was supposed to be a sanctuary for travellers. The folklore of this haunting originated from the 1500s. At this time, Klara von Helfenstein and her husband Ulrich von Laaber were living in the castle. Ulrich, the knight, did not stay at Wolfsegg very often at that time, so his wife Klara needed a man in the house to support her for protection, or if problems occurred. Her choice ended up being “Georg Moller” who owned the Hammermuehle in Heitzenhofen. Klara did not only take advantage of Georg’s support as protection, but also started an affair with him there closely after hiring him. Georg Moller was also an arch enemy of Klara’s husband. Ulrich von Laaber did not waste any time and hired two young farmers to kill his wife immediately. Not much later, Ulrich and his sons also suddenly died. There have been strange noises coming out of the cave area, which have been described as very haunting. There were several expeditions into the cave, where many skeletons were found. Including the cadaver of a big cave bear and many other animal skeletons. People decided, that the noises coming out of the cave were from hunters, who were hiding their prey. Still, people were avoiding the cave area. The strange noise coming out of the cave may have been solved by the findings of the expeditions, but this has not been the case of the haunting, “White Woman” who is still restlessly making her rounds.[20]

Würzburg: There is supposed to be the ghost of a dead nun walking through the halls of Praemonstratenser Abbey. The ghost is supposed to be Maria Renata Von Mossau. She was blamed for mixing herbs into everybody's food, so she could bewitch them. The nun was taken to execution after only three days her sentencing in court. She was first decapitated, and then burned. To this day, reports of her walking down the hallways and holding on to a bouquet of roses while picking off the petals and leaving a trail. According to legend, this is the sign of death for a holy man originating from Würzburg.[20]

India

Bhangarh, Rajasthan: Bhangarh was purportedly brought to ruin as a consequence of the curse of Baba Balanath. Another legend attributes it to the curse of a sorcerer Singha Sehra[29]

The Lambi Dehar Mines, Mussoorie: Many unexplained accidents are associated with this place. Presence of a screaming witch is also often felt by visitors.[30]

The Savoy Hotel: In Mussoorie, The Savoy Hotel became the inspiration of Agatha Christie's novel, The Mysterious Affair at Styles. The hotel does not only offer luxury, but reports of hauntings, as well. Its former owner, Lady Orme, who allegedly died of poisoning, is said to be haunting the opulent hotel. The ghost was reportedly seen aimlessly wandering the halls of her former hotel.[31]

Delhi – Delhi Cantt: Even the capital of India, Delhi is haunted! The most eerie place in Delhi is Delhi Cantt area which is full of green and lush trees. Most of the times, people have seen a lady clad in white sari asking for lift. If you don't stop your vehicle, she will start running swiftly with the same speed and believe it or not, people have reported her reaching ahead of them. This story has been doing the rounds for a while now. Some people claim that possibly the lady was a hitchhiker while alive; hence she waves at lonely passersby to stop.

Dow Hill, Kurseong, West Bengal: A number of murders have taken place in the Dow Hill forest that has left an eerie feeling in the atmosphere. Many locals have also heard footsteps in the corridors of Victoria Boys School during the December–March vacations. Woodcutters claim to have seen a headless young boy walking and then disappearing into the trees. All these things make this place one of the most haunted places in India.

Grand Paradi Towers, Mumbai: is the most famous haunted building in Mumbai. It is located in one of the city's most affluent neighborhoods. The eighth floor of the Grand Paradi Towers in Kemps Corner is the site of several freakish suicides or a gruesome pattern of deaths and accidents. An elderly couple leaped out of their apartment window in 2004. Their children and grandchild followed suit within the next year. There have been at least twenty cases of fatal accidents and suicides since the building was construction in 1976. Many of these accidents have involved children, and once a maid jumped or fell out of one of the windows.[32] The family who owned the building began to believe paranormal forces were at work. They decided to do a puja and a havan and ever since then the activity stopped—but the apartment remains unoccupied.[33]

Indonesia

The basement of the Building B of Lawang Sewu, a former prison. It is one of the room where ghost sightings have been reported.

Pelabuhan Ratu – Legend says that Nyai Roro Kidul (Nyai is a Javanese honorific for Madame), daughter of King Prabu Siliwangi, is the Queen of the South Sea. She is supposed to have committed suicide by jumping off the cliff and into the sea. Rumors say that if someone wears green when swimming (the Queen's favorite color), he or she will be pulled by her ghost into the sea. Room 308 at the Samudra Beach Hotel is set aside for the Queen.[34][35]

Lawang Sewu – literally means a 'thousand doors' in Javanese, is a former Dutch colonial building located in Semarang, Central Java. The building gain its name from having many doors and tall windows, which looks like doors. Many ghost sightings has been reported in the place, including ghost of a Dutch lady and headless ghouls. It is reported that during one of ghost haunting programs on television, a ghost was caught on camera. [36]

Ireland

Drumbeg Manor – Drumbeg Manor Inver, Donegal one of the most haunted places in all Europe. Apparitions and strange events are reported to have taken place; stories say that a screaming woman can be heard as well as the appearance of a man in a white suit walking the halls.[37]

Ducketts Grove: The mansion was owned by the Duckett family for 300 years. It is said to be haunted by a Banshee Ghost. On March 17, 2011, the SyFy show Destination Truth featured a four-hour live investigation for the episode to find out the mystery of the ruins.[38]

Kinnitty Castle: This stunning Gothic castle sits on a plot that once housed Druids and Bards. It has witnessed a long and turbulent history, and is reportedly the home of many ghosts, the most popular of which is the Phantom Monk of Kinnitty.[39]

Montpelier Hill: The Stewards House or as Killakee House was built around 1765 by the Conolly family as a hunting lodge. Over the years, it has served as a dower house and as a residence for the agent who managed the Killakee Estate. To its rear is a belfry; this was once a common feature of large farmhouses and was used to call the workers for meals. The Hell Fire Club held meetings here for a time following the fire that damaged Mount Pelier lodge. The house has a reputation for being haunted, stories particularly by a large black cat. The best documented account of these hauntings occurred between 1968 and 1970. The Evening Herald and Evening Press newspapers carried a number of reports regarding a Mrs Margaret O'Brien and her husband Nicholas, a retired Garda superintendent, who were converting the house into an arts centre. The redevelopment had been a troubled affair with tradesmen employed on the work leaving complaining of ghosts. One night, a friend of the O'Brien's, artist Tom McAssey, and two workmen were confronted by a spectral figure and a black cat with glowing red eyes. McAssey painted a portrait of the cat which hung in the house for several years after. Although locals were sceptical of the reports, further apparitions were reported, most notably of an Indian gentleman and of two nuns called Blessed Margaret and Holy Mary who had taken part in black masses on Mountpelier Hill. There were also reports of ringing bells and poltergeist activity. In 1970 an RTÉ television crew recorded a documentary about the house. In the documentary a clairvoyant called Sheila St. Clair communicated with the spirits of the house through automatic writing. In 1971, a plumber working in the house discovered a grave with a skeleton of a small figure, most likely that of a child or, perhaps, the body of the dwarf alleged to have been sacrificed by the members of the Hell Fire Club. The house operated as a restaurant in the 1990s before closing in 2001; it is now a private residence.[40][41][42]

Leap Castle: Many people were imprisoned and executed in the castle, and it is supposedly haunted by several spectres. The most terrifying of these beings is thought to have been summoned by Mildred Darby's occult activities. "It", the name given to the creature, is a small grey humanoid, about the size of a sheep, with a decaying face. The apparition is said to be accompanied by the stench of a decomposing corpse and the smell of sulphur. This particular spirit is called an Elemental. "It" is thought to be a primitive spirit. An Elemental is a manifestation believed to occur mainly in country areas and attach itself to a particular place. They are often malevolent, terrifying, and unpredictable. "It" appears to keep itself relatively hidden in comparison with the other spirits at Leap Castle. On occasion visitors will see the creature, and in few incidences be attacked.[43]

Japan

Amiidaji (Temple of Amida) in Dan-no-ura, in the Shimonoseki Strait, is the location of a legendary haunting. It is said that the blind Biwa h shi Hoichi, a resident of the temple, was visited every night by the ghost of a dead samurai and made to play the biwa in the cemetery, but the priest of the temple soon found out and had the heart sutra painted on every part of Hoichi's body apart from the ears. When the samurai returned one night to take Hoichi to the cemetery, he could only see Hoichi's ears, so he took them instead and Hoichi was left earless. Hoichi is commonly known as "Mimi-Nashi Hoichi", "H ichi the Earless", due to this event. This legend was famously retold by Lafcadio Hearn in his Kwaidan: Stories and Studies of Strange Things which was later adapted as part of Masaki Kobayashi's film Kwaidan. [44][45]

Aokigahara, the forest at the bottom of Mt. Fuji, is a popular location for suicide. This gives rise to a widespread belief that it is haunted. It was once featured on an episode of Destination Truth on the SyFy Channel.[46]

Okiku's Well at Himeji Castle is often said to be haunted by the ghost of Okiku. She is supposed to rise from the well at night and count to nine before shrieking and returning to the well.[47][48]

Malaysia

Tambun Inn: The Tambun Inn of Ipoh, one of the top tourist destinations in Malaysia is reported to be haunted by many ghostly accounts and many reports of the events have been documented in the inn. Some of these accounts mentioned about lights turning on and off, sounds of whispers and eerie cries heard in the inn. There was a report about a ghost of an old woman spotted within the vicinity of the inn.[49]

Mexico

Guanajuato: The Le Casa de las Brujas or The House of the Witches, was built in 1865. The house was owned by a Dutch mine owner by the name of Steve Carson. He was imprisoned for the murder of a man in a cantina for awhile. His daughter Susan was left in the custody of her aunts in the house. She was supposedly found beaten and starved to death in the cellar after a year. Susan haunts the house to this day. Appearances, sounds, and cold spots have all been discovered here.[50]

San Juan Teotihuacán: The Pilar Hacienda was built by the Spaniards who came to Mexico in the 16th century. It was one of the many ranches built by these explorers. Since the Hacienda is about two hundred years old, it is in very bad condition. The floors are very liable to breakdown. The hacienda is now owned by a farmer. On the top floor of the building there is a large cut on the window. It is believed to be the mark by Miguel Aritzitia who was a Spanish hidalgo. It seems that he died from falling off the balcony. When he went down he grabbed the window and created a long scratch. The wife of Miguel has been seen on the balcony crying “oh, my husband.” She was there at the time of his death and tried to save him. Mr. Aritzitia has been seen hanging from the window and has also been seen in a window. It is said that at times the scratch has disappeared from the window.[50]

Swamp South of Mexico City: The Island of Dolls is one of the most haunted sites in Mexico. Don Julian Santana was a man who lived as a hermit on this island for over fifty years. The tragic accident of a girl who drowned on the island while visiting, caused further madness in Julian. Some people believe that he started fishing dolls out of the river because he believed that the dolls were real children. Whatever it was that motivated him, the island was turned into a shrine for that little girl. Dolls by the hundreds hang in the trees and the house. Don Julian Santana was found in the same part of the river that the little girl drowned in by his nephew. He said that he heard voices beckoning to him from the river. Each of the dolls is believed to be fused with the energy of the little girl. Candles, hard candy, and dolls should be brought as offerings to appease the spirits. The dolls are said to move, beckon, and speak to those who come. The spirit of the man is also believed to be there still. Orbs, loud sounds, and opening doll eyes abound.[50]

Villa de Santiago, Puerto Genovevo: These mountainous roads have been the site of many car accidents. Among the numerous crosses, there is a set of ten crosses which are there for the remembrance of a family who was the tragic victims of a truck accident. If one stands next to the crosses, it is possible to see a truck moving very fast through the trees. Also, it is said that at midnight the screams and pain of those in the accident can be heard.[50]

Monaco

A former yacht belonging to Errol Flynn, the USS Zaca is berthed here and is supposed to be haunted. Witnesses have reported seeing the visage of Errol Flynn’s frustrated ghost pacing on board. Others have described the sounds of voices and laughter as if a wild party was happening on board.[51]

Oman

Bahla is an Omani town. In neighboring Gulf countries and Oman itself, there are rumours of Bahla accommodating jinns which is same as genies in English.[52]

Pakistan

The Koh-i-Chiltan peak in Balochistan is described according to a local myth and legend associated with it as being haunted by “spirits of forty babies.” [53]

The Mohatta Palace in Karachi is said to be haunted by ghosts of the British Raj era. Museum guides have reportedly acknowledged having seen various incidents where objects have been moved from their original place, or shifted about while guards have claimed to have “felt” the presence of certain spirits during the nights.[54]

Philippines

Baguio City itself is considered highly haunted. Aside from the military academy, there are other haunted places scattered throughout the city, such as cemeteries, old hotels and sites where populated buildings and structures used to stand until the 1990 earthquake brought them down, injuring and killing the people inside. [55][56]

Balete Drive, a residential area in Cubao, Quezon City, is famous for the apparition of a white lady. It is told that there was a teenage girl who was raped by a cab driver in the '50s in that area. It is possible that the lady of Balete is seeking revenge.[57]

The Manila Film Center was the site of a construction accident in the early '80s. When construction of the center was rushed for a film festival, the ceiling scaffolding collapsed, killing several workmen who fell to the orchestra below. Rather than halt construction to rescue survivors and retrieve the bodies of dead workmen, Imelda Marcos, the First Lady and the main financier of the project, was believed to have ordered cement to be poured into the orchestra, entombing the fallen workmen. Some of them were even buried alive in the orchestra. Various ghostly activities were reported on the site including mysterious sounds, voices and poltergeist activity. In the late '90s, a group called the Spirit Questors began to make visits to the film center in an attempt to contact and appease the souls of the workmen who were killed in the building. Some of these spirits claimed to have moved on, but a few allegedly remain.[58] Previously abandoned for its haunted reputation, the building is now currently in use.

The Ozone Disco was a disco in Quezon City that caught on fire.[59] Due to mass panicking, nobody was able to get out. Some people near the location hear ghostly disco music in their houses at night and see faint people dancing.[60]

Romania

Hotel Cismigiu, in Bucharest, is reportedly haunted by the ghost of a student girl. In the early 1990s, she fell in an elevator shaft by accident. She is supposed to have died there after a few hours, as no one came to her aid. [61]

Hoia Baci Forest, near Cluj-Napoca, has a reputation for paranormal activity. Reports have included, among others, folk ghost stories, apparitions, faces identified in photographs that were not visible with the naked eye, and, in the 1970s, UFO sightings. Visitors to the forest report anxiety and the feeling of being watched, and the local vegetation is oftentimes bizarre (strangely shaped trees, charring on tree stumps and branches).[62]

Hunyad Castle, Bonida Bánffy Castle, Bran Castle, and Poenari Castle, are all said to have significant amounts of unexplained activity. The places have included reports of ghostly apparitions, poltergeist activity, shadowy figures, orbs, spirit possessions, EVP's, and other unusual phenomena.[63]

Russia

South Africa

The Nottingham Road Hotel: A hotel in KwaZulu-Natal, the ghost of a former barmaid is said to still wander the hotel moving pots around the pub, moving light fixtures, moving sheets, and ringing the service bell.[64]

Sweden

Toftaholm Herrgard: The story from the hotel began between a commoner and a baron's daughter. However, the baron had his daughter married to someone else. On the day of the wedding, the commoner hanged himself from the rafters. The spirit of the commoner is said to wander Room 324 where the rafters once were.
