Abstract

Most of the research done on the Louisiana Creole comm on the vocabulary and folklore of Creole French. To date, methodological examination of other parameters envelop this dissertation, the previous findings will be extended by survey on the linguistic attitudes and cultural, ethnic, and African-Americans in South Louisiana who identify as Creole of several varieties of French in the state, the ethnic and the people who speak these dialects, and the overwhelming all facets of modern-day life, linguistic and social boundaries. This is reflected in the attitudes and the self-identification study, surveys were administered to 240 African-American sample was stratified by age, sex, Creole ancestry, and de French. The synchronic attitudes toward the language and analyzed in light of the historical changes undergone by the results show that Creoles in Louisiana today are still cogn meaning attached to the term, but are also participating in movement toward ethnic and racial pride, and are therefore African-American, while still showing some residual pride in concomitant loyalty toward both Creole language use in de Creole French as a positive item for the community.
