Abstract

Since The social logic of space was published in 1984, we have been conducting research on how space features in the outcome is the concept of a "spatial configuration" in a complex. New techniques have been developed and problems. The aim of this book is to assemble some of the theory of architecture: an "analytical" theory in which of configurational ideas in bringing to light the spatial logic possible to extend these ideas to other areas of the human are critical.
