Overview

Chapter Summary

This chapter defines globalization and examines models of the phases of globalization. It proposes the author's own chronology of globalization come in cyclical models that give globalization a long history, and linear models that gi

Roland Robertson proposed a model of the phases of globalization over time in his pioneering work Globalization: A Social Theory (1992). The model of the phases of globalization is based upon the author's definition of globalization as increasing interdependence and increasing intensity of world consciousness. Thus 'objective' interdependence and 'subjective' interdependence are the principle criteria used to determine the phases of globalization. The model of phases of globalization describes and examines aspects of religion which reflect the characteristics of the phase.

Keywords: globalization; religion; Roland Robertson; social theory
