Abstract:

Observational drawing is the artist's way of discovering his or her surroundings. In order to explore the process of bookmaking and the function of a book, I reprinted the drawings on scale, and reconstructed them in the same accordion fashion. As the process of drawing and bookmaking progressed, I allowed my subjects and accordion format to influence my creative decisions. Through this process, I have determined that the observational sketchbook is as much about the reflection of the artist as it is about the subject being observed.

Description:

Thesis completed in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the Alfred University Honors Program.
