 Sport and the law.

Author(s) : Grayson, E.

Book : Sport and the law. 1988 pp.376pp. ref.

Abstract : The book claims that without the Rule of Law to protect it, sport (and the Rule of Law and rules of play must operate together for their mutual advantage) is not in the benefit of the wider society which they both serve. The coveting of pre-recreational land by commercial developers; ambivalent attitudes towards community sport in schools by school teachers, local authorities and central government; the tension between public safety and professional and political apathy and exploitation; and, all, the harmful influences of the so-called permissive society are identified. The book shows that sport. The law alone as a last resort can protect sport if sport does not possess the understanding of its own problems to protect itself. The book aims to dem this can be achieved. The law is stated as at 31 October 1987.
