The Salubrious Endearment

Martin B. Marx

Abstract

Originally published in Contemporary Psychology: APA Review of Books, 1984, Vol 29(11), 902–903. Reviews the book, New Perspectives on Our Lives with Companion Animals edited by Aaron Honori Katcher and Alan M. Beck (1983). A great deal of “diligent and systematic inquiry” is reported in this book, but because most of the inquiries lack a theoretical base, fail to take into account the diversity of meanings that various species and breeds of animals have for us, and reflect little appreciation of the methodologic necessities of analytic research and inferential statistics, they are similar in scientific merit to the appliance salesman's research. This book is recommended for its intended audience—behavioral scientists, veterinarians, mental health practitioners and others interested in companion animals.
