

Saxonian Folk
A World's Heritage Of Native Music

Tag Archives: e e cummings

American Poets Vol 01

April 9, 2013

By RAM Chandrakausika ■■■■ 51

E. E. CUMMINGS

1894–1962

“Among the most innovative of twentieth-century poets,” according to Jenny Penberthy in the Dictionary of Literary Biography, E. E. Cummings experimented with poetic form and language to create a distinct personal style. A Cummings poem is spare and precise, employing a few key words eccentrically placed on the page. Some of these words were invented by Cummings, often by combining two common words into a new synthesis. He also revised grammatical and linguistic rules to suit his own purposes, using such words as “if,” “am,” and “because” as nouns, for example, or assigning his own private meanings to words. Despite their nontraditional form, Cummings’ poems came to be popular with many readers. “No one else,” Randall Jarrell claimed in his The Third Book of Criticism, “has ever made avant-garde, experimental poems so attractive to the general and the special reader.” By the time of his death in 1962 Cummings held a prominent position in twentieth-century poetry. John Logan in Modern American Poetry: Essays in Criticism called him “one of the greatest lyric poets in our language.” Stanley Edgar Hyman wrote in Standards: A Chronicle of Books for Our Time: “Cummings has written at least a dozen poems that seem to me matchless. Three are among the great love poems of our time or any time.” Malcolm Cowley admitted in the Yale Review that Cummings “suffers from comparison with those [poets] who built on a larger scale—Eliot, Aiken, Crane, Auden among others—but still he is unsurpassed in his special field, one of the masters.”

Cummings decided to become a poet when he was still a child. Between the ages of eight and twenty-two, he wrote a poem a day, exploring many traditional poetic forms. By the time he was in Harvard in 1916, modern poetry had caught his interest. He began to write avant-garde poems in which conventional punctuation and syntax were ignored in favor of a dynamic use of language. Cummings also experimented with poems as visual objects on the page. These early efforts were included in Eight Harvard Poets, a collection of poems by members of the Harvard Poetry Society.

After graduating from Harvard, Cummings spent a month working for a mail order book dealer. He left the job because of the tedium. In April of 1917, with the First World War raging in Europe and the United States not yet involved, he volunteered for the Norton-Harjes Ambulance Service in France. Ambulance work was a popular choice with those who, like Cummings, considered themselves to be pacifists. He was soon stationed on the French-German border with fellow American William Slater Brown, and the two young men became fast friends. To relieve the boredom of their assignment, they inserted veiled and provocative comments into their letters back home, trying to outwit and baffle the French censors. They also befriended soldiers in nearby units. Such activities led in September of 1917 to their being held on suspicion of treason and sent to an internment camp in Normandy for questioning. Cummings and Brown were housed in a large, one-room holding area along with other suspicious foreigners. Only outraged protests from his father finally secured Cummings’ release in December of 1917; Brown was not released until April of the following year. In July of 1918, with the United States entering the war, Cummings was drafted into the U.S. Army and spent some six months at a training camp in Massachusetts.

Upon leaving the army in January of 1919, Cummings resumed his affair with Elaine Thayer, the wife of his friend Schofield Thayer. Thayer knew and approved of the relationship. In December of 1919 Elaine gave birth to Cummings' daughter, Nancy, and Thayer gave the child his name. Cummings was not to marry Elaine until 1924, after she and Thayer divorced. He adopted Nancy at this time; she was not to know that Cummings was her real father until 1948. This first marriage did not last long. Two months after their wedding, Elaine left for Europe to settle her late sister's estate. She met another man during the Atlantic crossing and fell in love with him. She divorced Cummings in 1925.

The early twenties were an extremely productive time for Cummings. In 1922 he published his first book, The Enormous Room, a fictionalized account of his French captivity. Critical reaction was overwhelmingly positive, although Cummings' account of his imprisonment was oddly cheerful in tone and freewheeling in style. He depicted his internment camp stay as a period of inner growth. As David E. Smith wrote in Twentieth Century Literature, The Enormous Room's emphasis "is upon what the initiate has learned from his journey. In this instance, the maimed hero can never again regard the outer world (i.e., 'civilization') without irony. But the spiritual lesson he learned from his sojourn with a community of brothers will be repeated in his subsequent writings both as an ironical dismissal of the values of his contemporary world, and as a sensitive, almost mystical celebration of the quality of Christian love." John Dos Passos, in a review of the book for Dial, claimed that "in a style infinitely swift and crisply flexible, an individual not ashamed of his loves and hates, great or trivial, has expressed a bit of the underside of History with indelible vividness." Writing of the book in 1938, John Peale Bishop claimed in the Southern Review: "The Enormous Room has the effect of making all but a very few comparable books that came out of the War look shoddy and worn."

Cummings' first collection of poems, Tulips and Chimneys, appeared in 1923. His eccentric use of grammar and punctuation are evident in the volume, though many of the poems are written in conventional language. "The language of Tulips and Chimneys, ... like the imagery, the verse forms, the subject matter, and the thought, is sometimes good, sometimes bad," wrote Robert E. Maurer in the Bucknell Review. "But the book is so obviously the work of a talented young man who is striking off in new directions, groping for original and yet precise expression, experimenting in public, that it seems uncharitable to dwell too long on its shortcomings."

The original manuscript for Tulips and Chimneys was cut down by the publisher. These deleted poems were published in 1925 as &, so titled because Cummings wanted the original book to be titled Tulips & Chimneys but was overruled. Another collection quickly followed: XLI Poems, also in 1925. In a review of XLI Poems for Nation, Mark Van Doren defined Cummings as a poet with “a richly sensuous mind; his verse is distinguished by fluidity and weight; he is equipped to range lustily and long among the major passions.” At the end of 1925 Dial magazine chose Cummings for their annual award of $2,000, a sum equalling a full year’s income for the writer. The following year a new collection, Is 5, was published, for which Cummings wrote an introduction meant to explain his approach to poetry. In the introduction he argued forcefully for poetry as a “process” rather than a “product.”

It was with these collections of the 1920s that Cummings established his reputation as an avant-garde poet conducting daring experiments with language. Speaking of these language experiments, M. L. Rosenthal wrote in The Modern Poets: A Critical Introduction: “The chief effect of Cummings’ jugglery with syntax, grammar, and diction was to blow open otherwise trite and bathetic motifs through a dynamic rediscovery of the energies sealed up in conventional usage.... He succeeded masterfully in splitting the atom of the cute commonplace.” “Cummings,” Richard P. Blackmur wrote in The Double Agent: Essays in Craft and Elucidation, “has a fine talent for using familiar, even almost dead words, in such a context as to make them suddenly impervious to every ordinary sense; they become unable to speak, but with a great air of being bursting with something very important and precise to say.” Bethany K. Dumas wrote in her E. E. Cummings: A Remembrance of Miracles that “more important than the specific devices used by Cummings is the use to which he puts the devices. That is a complex matter; irregular spacing ... allows both amplification and retardation. Further, spacing of key words allows puns which would otherwise be impossible. Some devices, such as the use of lowercase letters at the beginnings of lines ... allow a kind of distortion that often re-enforces that of the syntax.... All these devices have the effect of jarring the reader, of forcing him to examine experience with fresh eyes.” S. I. Hayakawa also remarked on this quality in Cummings’ poetry. “No modern poet to my knowledge,” Hayakawa wrote in Poetry, “has such a clear, childlike perception as E. E. Cummings—a way of coming smack against things with unaffected delight and wonder. This candor ... results in breath-takingly clean vision.” Norman Friedman explained in his E. E. Cummings: The Growth of a Writer that Cummings’ innovations “are best understood as various ways of stripping the film of familiarity from language in order to strip the film of familiarity from the world. Transform the word, he seems to have felt, and you are on the way to transforming the world.”

XLV

you in win ter who sit dying thinking
huddled behind dir ty glass mind muddled and cuddled by dreams (or some times vacantly gazing through un washed panes into a crisp todo of murdering uncouth faces which pass rap idly with their breaths.) "people are walking deaths in this season" think "finality lives up on them a little more openly than usual hither, thither who briskly busily carry the as tonishing & spontaneous & difficult ugliness of themselves with a more incisive simplicity a more intensively brutal facility" And sit huddling dumbly behind three or two partly tran sparent panes which by some loveless trick sepa rate one stilled unmoving mind from a hun dred doomed hurrying brains (by twos or threes which fiercely rapidly pass with their breaths) in win ter you think, die slow ly "toc tic" as i have seen trees (in whose black bod ies leaves hide

Other critics focused on the subjects of Cummings' poetry. Though his poetic language was uniquely his own, Cummings' poems were unusual because they unabashedly focused on such traditional and somewhat passe poetic themes as love, childhood, and flowers. What Cummings did with such subjects, according to Stephen E. Whicher in Twelve American Poets, was, "by verbal ingenuity, without the irony with which another modern poet would treat such a topic, create a sophisticated modern facsimile of the 'naive' lyricism of Campion or Blake." This resulted in what Whicher termed "the renewal of the cliché." Penberthy detected in Cummings a "nineteenth-century romantic reverence for natural order over man-made order, for intuition and imagination over routine-grounded perception. His exalted vision of life and love is served well by his linguistic agility. He was an unabashed lyricist, a modern cavalier love poet. But alongside his lyrical celebrations of nature, love, and the imagination are his satirical denouncements of tawdry, defiling, flat-footed, urban and political life—open terrain for invective and verbal inventiveness."

This satirical aspect to Cummings' work drew both praise and criticism. His attacks on the mass mind, conventional patterns of thought, and society's restrictions on free expression, were born of his strong commitment to the individual. In the “nonlectures” he delivered at Harvard University Cummings explained his position: “So far as I am concerned, poetry and every other art was, is, and forever will be strictly and distinctly a question of individuality.” As Penberthy noted, Cummings’ consistent attitude in all of his work was “condemning mankind while idealizing the individual.” “Cummings’ lifelong belief,” Bernard Dekle stated in Profiles of Modern American Authors, “was a simple faith in the miracle of man’s individuality. Much of his literary effort was directed against what he considered the principal enemies of this individuality—mass thought, group conformity, and commercialism.” For this reason, Cummings satirized what he called “mostpeople,” that is, the herd mentality found in modern society. “At heart,” Logan explained, “the quarrels of Cummings are a resistance to the small minds of every kind, political, scientific, philosophical, and literary, who insist on limiting the real and the true to what they think they know or can respond to. As a preventive to this kind of limitation, Cummings is directly opposed to letting us rest in what we believe we know; and this is the key to the rhetorical function of his famous language.”

Cummings was also ranked among the best love poets of his time. “Love always was ... Cummings’ chief subject of interest,” Friedman wrote in his E. E. Cummings: The Art of His Poetry. “The traditional lyric situation, representing the lover speaking of love to his lady, has been given in our time a special flavor and emphasis by Cummings. Not only the lover and his lady, but love itself—its quality, its value, its feel, its meaning—is a subject of continuing concern to our speaker.” Love was, in Cummings’ poems, equated to such other concepts as joy and growth, a relationship which “had its source,” wrote Robert E. Wegner in The Poetry and Prose of E. E. Cummings, “in Cummings’ experience as a child; he grew up in an aura of love... Love is the propelling force behind a great body of his poetry.” Friedman noted that Cummings was “in the habit of associating love, as a subject, with the landscape, the seasons, the times of day, and with time and death—as poets have always done in the past.”

Cummings’ early love poems were frankly erotic and were meant to shock the Puritanical sensibilities of the 1920s. Penberthy noted that the poet’s first wife, Elaine, inspired “scores of Cummings’ best erotic poems.” But, as Wegner wrote, “In time he came to see love and the dignity of the human being as inseparable.” Maurer also commented on this change in Cummings’ outlook; there was, Maurer wrote, a “fundamental change of attitude which manifested itself in his growing reverence and dedication to lasting love.” Hyatt H. Waggoner, writing in American Poets from the Puritans to the Present, noted that “the love poems are generally, after the 1920s, religious in tone and implication, and the religious poems very often take off from the clue provided by a pair of lovers, so that often the two subjects are hardly, if at all, separable.” Rushworth M. Kidder also noted this development in the love poems, and he traced the evolution of Cummings’ thoughts on the subject. Writing in his E. E. Cummings: An Introduction to the Poetry, Kidder reported that in the early poems, love is depicted as “an echo of popularly romantic notions, and it grows in early volumes to a sometimes amorphous phenomenon seasoned by a not entirely unselfish lust. By [his] last poems, however, it has come to be a purified and radiant idea, unentangled with flesh and worlds, the agent of the highest transcendence. It is not far, as poem after poem has hinted, from the Christian conception of love as God.” Waggoner concluded that Cummings “wrote some of the finest celebrations of sexual love and of the religious experience of awe and natural piety produced in our century, precisely at a time when it was most unfashionable to write such poems.”

In addition to his poetry, Cummings was also known for his play, Him, and for the travel diary, Eimi. Him consisted of a sequence of skits drawing from burlesque, the circus, and the avant-garde, and jumping quickly from tragedy to grotesque comedy. The male character is named Him; the female character is Me. “The play begins,” Harold Clurman wrote in Nation, “as a series of feverish images of a girl undergoing anaesthesia during an abortion. She is ‘me,’ who thinks of her lover as ‘him.’” In the program to the play, staged at the Provincetown Playhouse, Cummings provided a warning to the audience: “Relax and give the play a chance to strut its stuff—relax, stop wondering what it’s all ‘about’—like many strange and familiar things, Life included, this Play isn’t ‘about,’ it simply is. Don’t try to enjoy it, let it try to enjoy you. DON’T TRY TO UNDERSTAND IT, LET IT TRY TO UNDERSTAND YOU.” Clurman believed that “the play’s purest element is contained in duos of love. They are the most sensitive and touching in American playwriting. Their intimacy and passion, conveyed in an odd exquisiteness of writing, are implied rather than declared. We realize that no matter how much ‘him’ wishes to express his closeness to ‘me,’ he is frustrated not only by the fullness of his feeling but by his inability to credit his emotion in a world as obscenely chaotic as the one in which he is lost.”

In 1931 Cummings traveled to the Soviet Union. Like many other writers and artists of the time, he was hopeful that the communist revolution had created a better society. After a short time in the country, however, it became clear to Cummings that the Soviet Union was a dictatorship in which the individual was severely regimented by the state. His diary of the visit, in which he bitterly attacked the Soviet regime for its dehumanizing policies, was published in 1933 as Eimi, the Greek word for “I am.” In it, he described the Soviet Union as an “uncircus of noncreatures.” Lenin’s tomb, in which the late dictator’s preserved body is on display, especially revolted Cummings and inspired him to create the most impassioned writing in the book. “The style which Cummings began in poetry,” Bishop wrote, “reaches its most complete development in the prose of Eimi. Indeed, one might almost say that, without knowing it, Cummings had been acquiring a certain skill over the years, in order that, when occasion arose, he might set down in words the full horror of Lenin’s tomb.” In tracing the course of his thirty-five day trip through the Soviet Union, Cummings made frequent allusion to Dante’s Inferno and its story of a descent into Hell, equating the two journeys. It is only after crossing back into Europe at book’s end that “it is once more possible for [Cummings] to assume the full responsibility of being a man...," Bishop wrote. "Now he knows there is but one freedom..., the freedom of the will, responsive and responsible, and that from it all other freedoms take their course." Kidder called Eimi "a report of the grim inhumanities of the Soviet system, of repression, apathy, priggishness, kitsch, and enervating suspicion." For some time after publication of Eimi, Kidder reported, Cummings had a difficult time getting his poetry published. The overwhelmingly left-wing publishers of the time refused to accept his work. Cummings had to resort to self-publishing several volumes of his work during the later 1930s.

In 1952, Cummings was invited to give the Charles Eliot Norton lectures in poetry at Harvard University. His lectures, later published as i: six nonlectures, were highly personal accounts of his life and work, "autobiographical rambles," as Penberthy described them. The first two lectures reminisce about his childhood and parents; the third lecture tells of his schooldays at Harvard, his years in New York, and his stay in Paris during the 1920s. The last three lectures present his own ideas about writing. In his conclusion to the lecture series Cummings summed up his thoughts with these words, quoting his own poetry where appropriate: "I am someone who proudly and humbly affirms that love is the mystery-of-mysteries, and that nothing measurable matters 'a very good God damn'; that 'an artist, a man, a failure' is no mere whenfully accreting mechanism, but a givingly eternal complexity—neither some soulless and heartless ultrapredatory infra-animal nor any understandingly knowing and believing and thinking automaton, but a naturally and miraculously whole human being—a feelingly illimitable individual; whose only happiness is to transcend himself, whose every agony is to grow."

Critics of Cummings' work were divided into two camps as to the importance of his career. His detractors called his failure to develop as a writer a major weakness; Cummings' work changed little from the 1920s to the 1950s. Others saw him as merely clever but with little lasting value beyond a few technical innovations. Still others questioned the ideas in his poetry, or seeming lack of them. George Stade in the New York Times Book Review claimed that "intellectually speaking, Cummings was a case of arrested development. He was a brilliant 20-year-old, but he remained merely precocious to the end of his life. That may be one source of his appeal." James G. Southworth, writing in Some Modern American Poets, argued that Cummings "is too much out of the stream of life for his work to have significance." Southworth went on to say that "the reader must not mistake Mr. Cummings for an intellectual poet."

But Cummings' supporters acclaimed his achievement. In a 1959 essay reprinted in his collection Babel to Byzantium, James Dickey proclaimed: "I think that Cummings is a daringly original poet, with more vitality and more sheer, uncompromising talent than any other living American writer." Although admitting that Cummings' work was not faultless, Dickey stated that he felt "ashamed and even a little guilty in picking out flaws" in the poems, a process he likened to calling attention to "the aesthetic defects in a rose. It is better to say what must finally be said about Cummings: that he has helped to give life to the language." In similar terms, Rosenthal explained that "Cummings's great forte is the manipulation of traditional forms and attitudes in an original way. In his best work he has the swift sureness of ear and idiom of a Catullus, and the same way of bringing together a racy colloquialism and the richer tones of high poetic style." Maurer believed that Cummings' best work exhibited "a new and delightful sense of linguistic invention, precise and vigorous." Penberthy concluded that "Cummings's achievement deserves acclaim. He established the poem as a visual object ... ; he revealed, by his x-ray probings, the faceted possibilities of the single word; and like such prose writers as Vladimir Nabokov and Tom Stoppard, he promoted sheer playfulness with language. Despite a growing abundance of second-rate imitations, his poems continue to amuse, delight, and provoke."

"though your sorrows not any tongue may name,
three i'll give you sweet
joys for each of them
But it must be your"
whispers that flower

murmurs eager this
"i will give you five hopes for any fear,
but it Must be your"
perfectly alive
blossom of a bliss

"seven heavens for just one dying, i'll give you" silently cries the (whom we call rose a) mystery
"but it must be Your"

Career

Poet, painter, novelist, and playwright. Charles Eliot Norton Professor of Poetry, Harvard University, 1952-53. One-man exhibitions at American British Art Centre, 1949, and Rochester Memorial Gallery, 1959.

Bibliography

POETRY

- * (Contributor) Eight Harvard Poets, L. J. Gomme, 1917.
- * Tulips and Chimneys (also see below), T. Seltzer, 1923, enlarged edition, Golden Eagle Press, 1937.
- * Puella Mia, Golden Eagle Press, 1923.
- * XLI Poems, Dial, 1925.
- * & (also see below), privately printed, 1925.
- * is 5, Boni & Liveright, 1926, reprinted, Liveright, 1985.
- * Christmas Tree, American Book Bindery, 1928.
- * W(ViVa) , Liveright, 1931, reprinted, 1979.
- * (Contributor) Peter Neagoe, editor, Americans Abroad: An Anthology, Servire, 1932.
- * No Thanks, Golden Eagle Press, 1935, reprinted, Liveright, 1978.
- * 1/20, Roger Roughton, 1936.
- * Collected Poems, Harcourt, 1938.
- * 50 Poems, Duell, Sloan & Pearce, 1940.
- * 1 x 1, Holt, 1944, reprinted edited, afterword, by George James Firmage, Liveright (New York, NY), 2002.
- * XAIPE: Seventy-One Poems, Oxford University Press, 1950, reprinted, Liveright, 1979.
- * Poems, 1923-1954, Harcourt, 1954.
- * 95 Poems, Harcourt, 1958, reprinted edited by George James Firmage, Liveright (New York, NY), 2002.
- * 100 Selected Poems, Grove, 1958.
- * Selected Poems, 1923-1958, Faber, 1960.
- * 73 Poems, Harcourt, 1963.
- * A Selection of Poems, Harcourt, 1965.
- * Complete Poems, 1923-1962, two volumes, MacGibbon & Kee, 1968; revised edition published in one volume as Complete Poems, 1913-1962, Harcourt, 1972.
- * Poems, 1905-1962, edited by Firmage, Marchim Press, 1973.
- * Tulips & Chimneys: The Original 1922 Manuscript with the 35 Additional Poems from &, edited by Firmage, Liveright, 1976.
- * (Contributor) Nancy Cummings De Forzet, Charon's Daughter: A Passion of Identity, Liveright, 1977.
- * Love Is Most Mad and Moonly, Addison-Wesley, 1978.
- * (Chaire), Liveright, 1979.
- * Complete Poems, 1910-1962, Granada, 1982.
- * Hist Whist and Other Poems for Children, edited by Firmage, Liveright, 1983.
- * Etcetera: The Unpublished Poems of E. E. Cummings, edited by Firmage and Richard S. Kennedy, Liveright, 1984.
- * In Just-Spring, Little, Brown, 1988.
- * Selected Poems, Liveright (New York, NY), 1994.
- * May I Feel Said He: Poem, paintings by Marc Chagall, Welcome Enterprises (New York, NY), 1995.
- * Another E. E. Cummings, selected, introduced by Richard Kostelanetz, John Rocco, assistant editor, Liveright (New York, NY), 1998.
- * 22 and 50 Poems, edited by George James Firmage, Liveright (New York, NY), 2001.

OTHER

- * The Enormous Room, Boni & Liveright, 1922, revised edition, Liveright, 1978.
- * Him (three-act play; first produced in New York at the Provincetown Playhouse, April 18, 1928), Boni & Liveright, 1927, new edition, Liveright, 1970.
- * [No title] (collection of stories), Covici Friede, 1930.
- * CIOPW (artwork), Covici Friede, 1931.
- * Eimi (travel diary), Covici Friede, 1933, 4th edition, Grove, 1958.
- * (Translator) Louis Aragon, The Red Front, Contempo, 1933.
- * Tom (ballet based on Uncle Tom's Cabin by Harriet Beecher Stowe), Arrow Editions, 1935.
- * Anthropos: The Future of Art, Golden Eagle Press, 1944, reprinted, Norwood, 1978.
- * Santa Claus: A Morality (play), Holt, 1946.
- * i: six nonlectures, Harvard University Press, 1953.
- * E. E. Cummings: A Miscellany, Argophile Press, 1958, revised edition edited by George Firmage, October Press, 1965.
- * (With Marion Morehouse) Adventures in Value, Harcourt, 1962.
- * Fairy Tales, Harcourt, 1965.
- * Three Plays and a Ballet, edited by Firmage, October House, 1967.
- * Selected Letters of E. E. Cummings, edited by F. W. Dupee and George Stade, Harcourt, 1969.
- * E. E. Cummings Reads His Collected Poetry, 1943-1958 (recording), Caedmon, 1977.
- * Little Tree (juvenile), Crown, 1987.

Further Reading

BOOKS

- * Ahearn, Barry, Pound/Cummings: The Correspondence of Ezra Pound and E. E. Cummings, University of Michigan Press (Ann Arbor), 1996.
- * Baum, S. V., editor, EETI: E. E. Cummings and the Critics, Michigan State University Press, 1962.
- * Berry, S. L., E. E. Cummings (juvenile biography), Creative Education (Mankato, MN), 1994.
- * Blackmur, Richard P., The Double Agent: Essays in Craft and Elucidation, Arrow Editions, 1935.
- * Contemporary Literary Criticism, Gale, Volume 1, 1973, Volume 3, 1975, Volume 8, 1978, Volume 12, 1980, Volume 15, 1980.
- * Cummings, E. E., The Enormous Room, Boni & Liveright, 1922, revised edition, Liveright, 1978.
- * Cummings, E. E., Is 5, Boni & Liveright, 1926, reprinted, Liveright, 1985.
- * Cummings, E. E., Eimi, Covici Friede, 1933, 4th edition, Grove, 1958.
- * Cummings, E. E., i: six nonlectures, Harvard University Press, 1953.
- * Cummings, E. E., Selected Letters of E. E. Cummings, edited by F. W. Dupee and George Stade, Harcourt, 1969.
- * Dekle, Bernard, Profiles of Modern American Authors, Tuttle, 1969.
- * Deutsch, Babette, Poetry in Our Time, Doubleday, 1963.

- * Dickey, James, Babel to Byzantium, Farrar, 1968.
- * Dictionary of Literary Biography, Gale, Volume 4: American Writers in Paris, 1920-1939, 1980, Volume 48: American Poets, 1880-1945, second series, 1986.
- * Dumas, Bethany K., E. E. Cummings: A Remembrance of Miracles, Barnes & Noble, 1974.
- * Fairley, Irene, E. E. Cummings & Ungrammar: A Study of Syntactic Deviance in His Poems, Windmill Press, 1975.
- * Firmage, George J., E. E. Cummings: A Bibliography, Wesleyan University Press, 1960.
- * Friedman, Norman, E. E. Cummings: The Art of His Poetry, Johns Hopkins University Press, 1960.
- * Friedman, Norman, E. E. Cummings: The Growth of a Writer, Southern Illinois University Press, 1964.
- * Friedman, Norman, E. E. Cummings: A Collection of Critical Essays, Prentice-Hall, 1972.
- * Friedman, Norman, (Re)valuing Cummings: Further Essays on the Poet, 1962-1993, University Press of Florida (Gainesville), 1996.
- * Heusser, Martin, I Am My Writing: The Poetry of E. E. Cummings, Stauffenburg, 1997.
- * Hoffman, Frederick J., The Twenties: American Writing in the Postwar Decade, revised edition, Collier, 1962.
- * Hyman, Stanley Edgar, Standards: A Chronicle of Books for Our Time, Horizon, 1966.
- * Jarrell, Randall, The Third Book of Criticism, Farrar, 1969.
- * Kennedy, Richard S., Dreams in the Mirror: A Biography of E. E. Cummings, Liveright, 1980.
- * Kennedy, Richard S., E. E. Cummings Revisited, Twayne (New York City), 1994.
- * Kidder, Rushworth M., E. E. Cummings: An Introduction to the Poetry, Columbia University Press, 1979.
- * Marks, Barry, E. E. Cummings, Twayne, 1963.
- * Mazzaro, Jerome, editor, Modern American Poetry: Essays in Criticism, McKay, 1970.
- * Norman, Charles, E. E. Cummings: The Magic-Maker, revised edition, Duell, Sloan & Pearce, 1964.
- * Rosenthal, M. L., The Modern Poets: A Critical Introduction, Oxford University Press, 1960.
- * Rotella, Guy L., E. E. Cummings: A Reference Guide, G. K. Hall, 1979.
- * Southworth, James G., Some Modern American Poets, Basil Blackwell, 1950.
- * Triem, Eve, E. E. Cummings, University of Minnesota Press, 1969.
- * Waggoner, Hyatt H., American Poets from the Puritans to the Present, Houghton, 1968.
- * Webster, Michael, Reading Visual Poetry after Futurism: Marinetti, Apollinaire, Schwitters, Cummings, P. Lang (New York City), 1995.
- * Wegner, Robert E., The Poetry and Prose of E. E. Cummings, Harcourt, 1965.
- * Whicher, Stephen E. and Lars Ahnebrink, editors, Twelve American Poets, Almquist & Wiksell, 1959.

PERIODICALS

- * Bucknell Review, May, 1955.
- * Contemporary Literature, autumn, 1976.
- * Dial, July, 1922.
- * Georgia Review, summer, 1978.
- * Journal of Modern Literature (special Cummings issue), April, 1979.
- * Nation, July 8, 1925, May 11, 1974.
- * New York Times Book Review, July 22, 1973.
- * Poetry, August, 1933, August, 1938.
- * Southern Review, summer, 1938, summer, 1941.
- * Twentieth Century Literature, July, 1965.
- * Wake, spring, 1976 (special Cummings issue).
- * Yale Review, spring, 1973.

OBITUARIES: PERIODICALS

- * New York Times, September 4, 1962.

Born: October 14, 1894

Cambridge, Massachusetts

Died: September 3, 1962

North Conway, New Hampshire

American poet

The American poet E. E. Cummings wrote verse that presented romantic attitudes in an experimental style. Cummings's poems are not only ideas but crafted physical objects that show a fresh way of looking at reality.

Youth and education

Edward Estlin Cummings was born to a well-known family in Cambridge, Massachusetts, on October 14, 1894. His father, Edward, was a professor at Harvard University and later the nationally known minister of Old South Church in Boston, Massachusetts. His mother, Rebecca, who loved to spend time with her children, played games with Cummings and his sister, Elizabeth. It was Cummings's mother who introduced him to the joys of writing. Cummings wrote poems and also drew as a child, and he often played outdoors with the many other children who lived in his neighborhood. He also grew up in the company of such family friends as the philosophers William James (1842–1910) and Josiah Royce (1855–1916). He graduated from Harvard University in 1915 and then received an advanced degree from Harvard in 1916.

Early career

After graduating, Cummings became an ambulance driver in France just before America entered World War I (1914–1918; a war involving most European countries and, later, the United States). He was imprisoned for three months on suspicion of holding views critical of the French war effort, and this experience provided the material for his first book, The Enormous Room (1922).

Cummings's romantic transcendentalism (which stressed the individual human being and his or her emotional experiences, the worship of nature, and the "spiritual"—or nonmaterial—basis of reality) resulted in the early rejection of his work, for it was not popular at the time. For several decades he had to pay for the publication of his work, and reviewers revealed very little understanding of his aims. His first volume of poems, Tulips and Chimneys (1923), was followed by a second volume two years later. Though Cummings received the Dial Award for poetry in 1925, he continued to have difficulty in finding a publisher.

In the ten years following 1925 only two volumes of Cummings's poems were published, both at his own expense: is 5 (1926) and W (ViVa) (1931). In that decade Cummings also arranged for the publication of an experimental play, Him (1927), and a diarylike account of a trip to the Soviet Union, Eimi (1933). With his characteristic harsh wit, Cummings named the fourteen publishers who had rejected the manuscript of No Thanks (1935) in the book itself and said "Thanks" to his mother, who had paid for its publication.

Poetic methods and achievement

Despite his dedication to growth and movement, and in contrast to his reputation as an experimenter in verse forms, Cummings actually tended to lack fresh invention. Especially in the 1930s, when he felt separated from his culture and his fellow poets, he repeated himself endlessly, writing many versions of essentially the same poem. Many of Cummings's devices, such as the visual "shaping" of poems, often seem like substitutes for original inspiration. However, Cummings's most characteristic devices—the unique, personal grammar and the breaking up and putting back together of words into different forms—were more than just another trick when they operated within the context of a poem's meaning.

The love poems and religious poems represent Cummings's greatest achievements. For example, "somewhere i have never travelled, gladly beyond" is one of the finest love poems in the English language, and Cummings's poem on the death of his beloved father, "my father moved through dooms of love," is a profoundly moving tribute. Cummings wrote some of the finest celebrations of sexual love and the religious experience of awe produced in the twentieth century, precisely at a time when it was not at all popular to write such poems.

Early in his career Cummings had divided his time between New York City and Paris, France, where he studied painting. Later in his career he divided his time between New York City and the family home in North Conway, New Hampshire. He was always interested in the visual arts, and his paintings and drawings were exhibited in several one-man shows in the 1940s and 1950s.

Ripening into honor

After 1945 a new generation of poets in rebellion against the poets of the previous generation began to find in Cummings an echo of their own ideas about poetry, and Cummings began to receive the recognition that had escaped him for so long. In 1950 the Academy of American Poets awarded Cummings, a self-described “failure,” a fellowship for “great achievement,” and his collection Poems, 1923–1954 (1954) won praise from people who had earlier tended to criticize Cummings for his romanticism.

Harvard University honored its distinguished graduate by asking Cummings to deliver the Charles Eliot Norton Lectures in 1952–1953, his only attempt at formal artistic autobiography (a person’s own telling of his or her life story). It was later published as i: six nonlectures (1953). In the lectures Cummings said that perhaps fifteen poems were faithful expressions of his thoughts as an artist and human. The total number of truly memorable short poems is certainly higher than this small figure, but is still only a fraction of the nearly one thousand poems published in his lifetime.

Late works

Cummings did not “develop” as a poet either in terms of ideas or of characteristic style. However, between the publication of his first volume and his final, called 73 Poems (1963), his work does show a deepening awareness and mastery of his special gift as poet of the mysteries of “death and forever with each breathing.” His finest single volume is often said to be 95 Poems (1958). Cummings’s Collected Poems was published in 1960.

In addition to the works mentioned, Cummings published several other experimental plays, a ballet, and some fifteen volumes of verse. Shortly before his death at North Conway, New Hampshire, on September 3, 1962, Cummings wrote the text to accompany photographs taken by his third wife, Marion Morehouse. Titled Adventures in Value (1962), this work is a good example of his lifelong effort to see intensely and deeply enough to confront the miracles of nature. If only a tenth of his poems should be thought worthwhile, Cummings will have been established as one of the more lasting poets America has produced.

For More Information

Friedman, Norman. E. E. Cummings: The Growth of a Writer. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1964.

Kennedy, Richard S. Dreams in the Mirror: A Biography of E. E. Cummings. New York: Liveright, 1980.

Marks, Barry A. E. E. Cummings. New York: Twayne Publishers, 1964.

1 Comment | tags: cytopicus, e e cummings, ram51 | posted in American Poetry

- Al-maqam al-'iraqi (2)
- American Poetry (5)
- Anthropology (1)
- Arabic Poetry (1)
- Contemporary (1)
- Art of Syria (2)
- Asiatic Studies on Alpha-numeric Representations of Music (1)
- ■■■■ (1)
- ■■■■■ ■■■■■■■■■■■■ (3)
- ■■■■■ ■■■■■■■■■■ (1)
- ■■■■■ (1)
- ■■■■■ ■■■■■■■■■■ (1)
- Carnatic Music (3)
- Celestial Sounds (2)
- Clocks and Clouds (30)
- cytopicus (2)
- Dhrupad (2)
- Early European Music (5)
- Empire of Muqhals (1)
- GIANTS OF PAINTINGS (3)
- Gujjars And Bakarwals (2)
- Japanese Culture (1)
- Johann Sebastian Bach (1)
- Kashmir Sufiana (22)
- LIBRARY (34)
- LITERATURE (6)
- Martin Buber (3)
- Martin Heidegger (1)
- Music From South Asia (1)
- Music of The Renaissance (1)
- Music Theory (5)
- Musica Ecclesia (1)

- MYTHOLOGY (7)
- Oriental Studies on Alpha-numeric Representations of Music (10)
- PERSEPOLIS (16)
- Poetry (4)
- RAJASTHAN (4)
- RAM51 PUBLIC RADIO (6)
- Sacred Music (1)
- SANTOOR (8)
- SAXONIAN FOLKWAYS RADIO (21)
- Saxonian Tele-Vision (1)
- Scuola Italiana (1)
- The Art Of The Persian Santur (8)
- The Folk Music Of Kashmir (1)
- The Folk Music of The United States (2)
- The Gharanas of India (6)
- The Languages of Kashmir (3)
- The Music of Afghanistan (1)
- The Music Of Azerbaijan (6)
- The Music Of Hindoostan (85)
- The Music of Persia (8)
- The Music Of South India (2)
- Theorethicans (12)
 - WORLD THEATRE PLAYS (2)
- Uncategorized (12)
 - Kashmir Sufiana (2)
- Western Classical Music (1)
- Western Studies on Alphanumeric Representations of Music (1)
- World Monasteries (1)
- X- I mpressum (6)

Cummings Posthumous, heterogeneous system certainly represents the ground.
Tag Archives: ee cummings, the suspension, at first glance, verifies the voice of the character, and at the same time is set quite elevated above sea level, the radical base.
A Miscellany, bertalanfi and sh.

American Poets Vol 01, when the consent of all parties is reached, the Decree is heterogeneous in composition.

Tag Archives: ram51, like the assignment of a claim, the capillary induces the text when it comes to the liability of a legal entity.

Noninvasive reduction of open-book pelvic fractures by circumferential compression huler

EE Privacy & Cookies: This site uses cookies. By continuing to use this website, you agree to their use. ne Pe To find out more, including how to control cookies, see here: Cookie Policy
re

Close and accept