Abstract Over the last four decades the sociological life course approach with its focus on the interplay of structure and agency has become a dominant research perspective in the social sciences. Yet, while it has successfully been applied to almost all fields of population research and their integration patterns. This is puzzling since understanding immigrants' integration patterns is a complex task. Moving forward: any integration theory actually refers to life course processes. This volume shows fruitful cross-linkages between different disciplines presented that all apply sociological life course concepts to research on migrants and migrant groups in European and non-European domains in the life course. Using a wide variety of methodological approaches, it covers both quantitative and qualitative studies based on interviews. Attention is paid to the life courses of those who migrated themselves.
