In 1629 Sir George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore, was at a crossroads in his life. He departed his fledgling colony for the warmer climes of Virginia, entertaining the possibility of a new colonial venture in the Chesapeake. Although the arrival of his settlers in Maryland in 1634, the colony was very much the culmination of his efforts and experience. This is a previously unpublished letter from George Calvert to his close friend Sir Thomas Wentworth on the eve of his dep document contains important insights on Calvert's first New World venture and illustrates how Ferryland and the proprietary Province of Avalon were inexorably linked, both by family and design, to Maryland.
