Because of his role as chairman of the Senate crime investigation widely viewed hearings in March 1951, U.S. Senator Estes Kefauver became television's first political star. This research examines contemporary particularly those from Kefauver's adopted hometown of Chattanooga to determine the extent to which such a storyline was immediate electronic database resources, supplemented by book and periodical content, form a contextual framework through which it is argued that Chattanooga dailies were in fact attuned to the changes being probed. Ultimately, The Chattanooga Times is found to have perceived developments and their aftermath much more intently than did the Free Press.
