Standards of Translating Poetry:Conveying Spirits and the Original——A Case Study of "Maple Bridge Night Mooring" Translated by Wang Rongpei

LIU Xing-feng (Department of Foreign Languages,Nanjing Institute of Technology,Nanjing)

It is widely acknowledged that poetry could not be translated into other languages,or more exactly,impossible to convey the sense and spirits of the source poems. However,the noted Wang Rongpei,an eminent translator,has translated a large amount of Chinese poetry into English,including "The Book of Poetry" ,"Tao Te Ching" ,"The Book of Change" ,"The Handan Dream" ,"The Complete Works of Du Fu" ,etc,into English,which win general acceptance. Wang Rongpei has translated all of these works by adhering to the principle of "conveying spirits and sense of the original". "Maple Bridge Night Mooring" translated by Wang Rongpei is compared with respect to "conveying spirits" and "conveying sense". The results show that Wang's version is better in terms of "conveying spirits and sense" of the original. Besides,the relation between "conveying spirits" and "conveying sense" is examined. It is concluded that the standard stands out as to rendering poetry.
