Abstract
This thesis explores traditional philosophies of Māori motherhood. Drawing from traditional accounts of our cosmologies, from mteatea, whakatauki and pakiwaitara, it seeks to uncover aspects of our maternities that for many Māori mothers today have become buried under the plethora of Western maternal knowledges.

Māori maternities represent a conflicted space for Māori women and whānau in contemporary Aotearoa/New Zealand. Colonisation has acted to significantly corrupt a traditionally... Read more
