Abstract

What would have happened had the "road not taken" been the chosen one? What interventions? What can we learn from a close look at alternatives? Drawing on six detailed case studies (the Balkans, Haiti, Lebanon, Liberia, Zaire/Congo), I. William Zartman identifies a series of missed options that, if provided feasible and better outcomes for the reduction of violent conflict and state collapse.

Zartman specifies potential solutions within the entire trajectory of each case, considering in each instance why the indicated decisions were not taken. The mechanisms that he develops in the course of his analysis have provided a framework for actions of the international community in preventing conflicts from occurring and for managing violent situations when they do occur.
