The Radical Orthodoxy [RO] movement has been gaining momentum in the theological academy. Its most recent attempts to extend the RO vision in dialogue with the Dutch Reformed tradition. Clearly, the central features of 'R prophetic engagement with the various domains of late modern society. At another level, however, the globalizing the dominant pagan deities are not just secularism, nihilism, or capitalism, but also those of other religions. At this be unable to sustain an engagement with the plurality of mythoi operative in the public square. Rather than unde project revised by Smith, I propose a 'pneumatological assist' and argue that a more robust pneumatological theology (the one undeveloped by Smith) enables the kind of engagement that is required in our religiously plural late modern world.
