Abstract : The study looks at the objectives of EC regional policy: (1) to foster regional economic development; (2) reduce regional disparities; and (3) reduce concentration in congested areas; and considers what data and comparable available for implementing and managing such policies. The analysis focuses development of population, GDP, and employment in agriculture, industry and the 76 programming regions of the EC between 1950, 1960 and 1970. Comparable data are composed for these analyses, which may also serve other purposes. They and various other analytical data are reproduced in Trends in regional development, regional disparities and the dynamics of the system are analyzed. Much attention is paid to methodology and conclusions for further research and improvement of statistics.
