revisiting Beijing, I felt estranged from my homeland. Asanuma (1999) says, "Meaning is created out of the knowledge of past experiences and one's interaction with others" (p.23). The idea that our lives are composed not only of major events but the countless little events intrigued me and I could not

family and attend my fifty-year class reunion, which gave me the opportunity to revisit and reflect on the past and present. Like Hongyu Wang (2004) help but keep note of them. This paper describes my struggle from the inbetween spaces of insider/outsider, in multiple re-writings of tangled memories. I recorded the day-to-day happenings in a diary. I drew on the poetic discourse of Haiku as I felt that diary entries, alone, would inadequately convey the deep-felt emotions in these moments. A poetic discourse of the mundane of everyday life "seikatsu tsuzurikata" (daily diary) becomes an invocation for "questing" in-between languages and cultures.
