Abstract:

This creative endeavor represents the culmination of three years of theoretical study on the art of creative writing. Through my years at CSUN, I have been gifted with an understanding of theories on gender, marginality, and freedom. This creative work is a response to the teachings of Judith Butler, Saussure, and many more. My protagonist, Feora, embodies the efforts of marginalized, queer, and disabled individuals which is unforgiving of the deviant. Born to a society of shapeshifters who believe themselves gods, she lacks the ability to change. As the story progresses, her disability becomes inverted-- now a talent grounded, giving her perspective and insight. As she is antagonized by the other inhabitants of this heavenly paradise, she begins to wonder what life might be like if she lived exclusively with those who are the disabled. Her journey leads to further discoveries about the self-constructed identity, issues of appearance, and the disabled.
