Modern expansion in the scope of philosophy began an ongoing philosophical introspection into traditional Korean thought and Korean Buddhism, how they can be defined, and what they mean. Yram Pak Chonghong (1903–1976) was a seminal figure who initiated this effort by making a groundbreaking proclamation for the existence of a distinct Korean thought and identity. By proclaiming that the past critically informed the present and vice versa, he tried to renew and revitalize the Korean philosophy of the past, which had been locked away and displayed as an artifact or fossil, transforming it into a relevant, living philosophy of the present. On the other hand, he was a dedicated scholar of Korean thought who explored its practical boundaries and content.
works on Wnhyo and other Korean Buddhist philosophers, as well as T’oebye and other Korean Confucians. Pak pointed to Korean Confucianism and Buddhism as treasures awaiting excavation — and the need for a new methodological tool to integrate Korean thought with the concepts and logical methods of Western philosophy. These efforts firmly placed Korean thought on the shelf of philosophy as a discipline. The breadth of sources and the scrutiny he gave them in his work set the standard of Korean Buddhist scholarship that was unmatched for some time. Even now, his theories on Korean Buddhist philosophy still guide scholars. So translated into a modern context, the study of Korean Buddhism became an important field of Korean philosophy, and these efforts became the catalyst for a wealth of lively discourse on Korean academic world.
