How to gamble: Information and misinformation in books and other media on gambling

Nigel Turner, Barry Fritz, Bronwyn Mackenzie

Abstract

Currently a large number of books, videocassettes and computer programs are available to teach people how to gamble. This article is an examination of this wealth of information. The paper begins by describing the number and types of materials available to gamble available in an online catalogue and in libraries and bookstores (Stu

The paper then turns the discussion to an examination of the accurate and inaccurate information found in a sample of these materials (Study Two). The studies found that the majority of the material available was on skilled games, but a sizeable number of materials on non-skilled games were also found. The quality of these materials ranged from pure nonsense to accurate. The best materials found were in books on gambling in general and in materials on how to play poker. This paper includes a catalogue of accurate and inaccurate information found in the books as well as a series of notes on a number of books, Web sites and other gambling-related material.
