Abstract

This project sought to develop programmed instruction materials for the Philippines in independent study in the art of preaching and evangelism, challenging to Filipino lay people-- particularly to the church members and of ordained ministers. Preaching the Gospel and nurturing men and women on their shoulders. Unfortunately, the laity who do the bulk of the work are often handicapped by lack of formal ministerial training. Thus Seventh-day Adventist leadership is challenged to equip and instruct the laity to preach and evangelize the demands of a rapidly growing membership. Programmed instruction, especially for the laity is one attempt to meet this situation.

Programmed instruction arranged learning activities in a series of steps leading the learner by independent study to desired goals. The lessons provide the learner with opportunities to apply it. Behavioral objectives are stated so students know what they can and should do after completion. Programmed instruction in preaching is perhaps most effective in Theological Education by Extension--which brings education to the people working in the churches, puts learning into an informal setting with the "right" people, and makes the theory realistic by putting it into practice. The programmed instruction reminds the learner that three things determine the success of preaching: (1) the preacher, (2) the people, and (3) the sermons.

First, effective sermons are related to the whole life of the preacher. Second, his/her Christ-like attitude, his/her diligent study of the Bible, and his/her devotion to the congregation are preconditions for effective preaching. Second, sermons appropriate to the congregation are preached. Third, the preacher asks himself three questions: (1) Do I know the people? (2) Do I seek to feed them spiritually with divine Word that meets their needs? (3) Do I seek to feed them spiritually with divine Word that meets their needs? effective, appropriate sermons can be preached only by careful preparation and development. The programmed instruction in preaching helps sermon from the initial idea to the final delivery. In all the inst reminded that he/she is a messenger called by God, that God' Christ which is the theme and center of the message and that one receive salvation.
