Abstract:

Across the years, ballplayers occasionally have had their names attached to fictions that link sports and romance. Mathewson, for one, was credited as coauthor of a play, The Girl and the Pennant, while Frank Chance had his name on The Bride and the Pennant. Mathewson's collaborator was playwright- songwriter-librettist Rida Johnson Young. This article arises: How much of a role did Mathewson actually have in writing The Girl and the Pennant ? Was his name connected as a marketing tool? Additionally, how did audiences and critics respond to the play? The issue of authorship also raises a question regarding The Bride and the Pennant. What precisely was Frank Chance's involvement? How much did he do? Was he connected to the project merely as a selling point? And also, how was The Bride and the Pennant received by audiences and readers?
