Keepers of the history: women and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Author: Young EG

Source: New York, New York, Columbia University, Teachers College Press, 1992. xii, 223 p. (Athene Series)

Abstract: This book explores the question of what sort of political movement is necessary to break the cycle of violence embodied by the Israeli-Palestinian war. The analysis is fueled by a feminist rereading of the conflict between Zionism and Palestinian nationalism that focuses on the histories and experiences of women on both sides. The first chapter of the book follows women on the journey through colonization, and chapter 2 reviews the historical precedents for women supporting the survival of women. The third chapter moves to the modern era and describes women's rights and ethnic relations. Chapter 4 explores the consequences of androcentric historical developments for women. The epilogue notes that the questions raised in the book shift the focus of political discourse and political struggle away from a hierarchical, dualistic framework of polar opposites rooted in patriarchal and phallogocentric politics towards a recognition that a feminist perspective can reveal that the true struggle is to overcome the misconceptions, lies, and strategies of colonization as well as the exploitative race/sex/class relations that mark Israeli life.
