Publisher Summary

This chapter discusses synesthesia and the arts. By means of synesthesia involving color and sound, Baudelaire employs words to translate into music the colors of the paintings he viewed in the exhibition. Synesthesia serves as a means to unify the arts through a psychological unity of the senses. Synesthesia refers to the transfer of qualities from one sensory domain to another, to the translation of texture to tone or of tone to color, smell or taste. Because the various modes of art—poetry, painting, music, sculpture, dance—rest on and appeal to different senses, synesthesia correspondences among the senses thereby can point to similarities and analogies—as well as to differences among the artistic forms.
