Before her time

Laurence Dopson Freelance journalist

Sister Dora's memory is kept alive in the Midlands town of Walsall where she lived and worked

Sister Dora is as alive today in the Black Country as when she nursed in the hospital at Walsall in the 1860s and 1870s. Books about her continue to appear and at the start of the new millennium, nurses will lay wreaths at her statue in the centre of Walsall as they do every January, when there is a service of thanksgiving for her life and work.
