Abstract

Graduate education, in rhetoric and composition as in other fields, often makes changes incrementally. Occasionally, however, programs encounter a different exigence, usually as they initiate a program or rejuvenate one, allowing them to design more globally. Since 2005 at Florida State University, we have been re-developing the graduate program in rhetoric and composition to prepare students for the needs of the 21st century. Key to our program is a remix of technology and of culture—inside and across courses, within the program, and across professional opportunities.
