Overview

Chapter Summary

In planning the session about "The Legacy of Sociology" at the 37th World Congress of the International Institute of Sociology certainly had more in mind than a mere combination of representatives from different national sociological traditions. Margaret Archer, Raymond Boudon, and myself. The pragmatists clearly were mostly interested in the natural sciences, whereas the hermeneuticists obviously lived in an intense dialogue with theology, the history of philosophy, literature, and the study of major innovations in the field of values is neither a philosophical attempt to offer a rational justification nor a historical reconstruction of the contingencies of their emergence. Philosophical justifications do not need history. This course, taken from Nietzsche. Nietzsche is the pioneer of all studies about the genesis of values.

Keywords: affirmative genealogy; sociological traditions
