Torah Quotations Common to Philo of Alexandria and the Acts of the Apostles

GJ Steyn

Abstract

It is the intention of this contribution to investigate the text form of the LXX Torah quotations that occur in the Acts of the Apostles. It forms part of a larger project which investigates the common text form of the Torah quotations in the Acts of the Apostles. Version by both Philo and the New Testament. Six cases are investigated of which five are present in the LXX. There were no clear traces found of another Textvorlage of the Torah that was used by Luke and/or Philo in the Acts. The quotations in the Acts resemble adaptations and interpretations already made in the Christian tradition by his time. Several of the quotations are direct quotations and paraphrases of the quoted passages. Noteworthy, however, is that Philo's text form and that of the Acts are very close in the cases investigated here. Where Philo notably differs from the reconstructed LXX text, Luke's text is in closer alignment to that of the LXX than to that of Philo.
