What I did wrong

Writing Queensland

Issue 242 (Jul 2014)

O'Duffy, Patrick

Abstract: There's been lots of talk about how much money people can make - or not make - from independent e-publishing lately. Author Hugh Howey launched a site called Author Earnings, which uses some maybe-representative-maybe-not data to create complicated reports suggesting that self-publishers can make pots and pots of money. But in the same time period I've read a bunch of blog posts by various writers talking about how little they've made from publishing their own work on the Kindle Store or wherever.
