Abstract

Those interested in studying the society and economy of pre-revolutionary level may have difficulty in finding suitable source materials. The published sources is often not detailed or precise enough to answer questions about the livelihood and social relationships of ordinary sources which may help to answer such questions and which are available today are private documents and papers, popular editions of local period, and local government archives. Although discussion has been introducing the private papers to be found in Taiwan, it will be discussed briefly on the other two categories of sources.
